Characters Info Sheet

Characters

There are many characters, both good and bad, in the world of Orcs Must Die. Most of them bad. Below is a list of some of the most prominent creatures to be found in Orcs Must Die!

The War Mage

Impulsive, stubborn, and not the sharpest tool in the shed, he's far from the Order's best and brightest. But these days, with so many rift fortresses to protect from the orc mob, everyone with any magical ability at all is needed on the line. If he's the last, best hope, then maybe all hope is lost. On the plus side, he loves killing orcs – and he's really good at it.

Orc Warrior

They're ugly, they're dumb, they stink, and they have a terrible dental plan. They're determined to get to the rifts, no matter what stands in the way. Clearly they must die - and fortunately they die easily and in large numbers. Just don't get too close; their swords are rusty enough to cause a nasty case of lockjaw.

Crossbow Orc

Five brain cells smarter and a head taller than the average orc, these guys have been trained to point a crossbow at their enemies and pull the little trigger (the one by their finger). Given that orcs have the eyesight of an aged mole, their aim is pretty good. They're more dangerous than their sword-wielding buddies; obviously, all orcs must die, but maybe these orcs should die first.

Gnoll Hunter

Sporting razor-sharp teeth, a fast loping gait, and powerful claws, Gnoll Hunters aren't interested in getting through the rift – they're interested in killing you! (They're also interested in killing archers and paladins, but everyone knows tender young War Mage is the sweetest meat of all.)

Hellbat

Look at that hideous thing. Just look at it. Clearly those stubby wings aren't keeping that bloated monstrosity in the air. What makes it float? Is it magic, or its steady diet of extra-large bean burritos?

Kobold Runner

Stay alert when kobolds are around – unlike orcs, runners aren't stupid enough to stand and fight. That said, if you manage to land a hit, they're extremely fragile and have a highly satisfying death squeal.

Ogre

Ogres take a ton of punishment and dish out even more; they're dangerous foes for even the most talented war mage. Turn-offs include bathing, waxing, and vegetables.
